EAGLES TITLE - BOUND

By Herb Good

Philadelphia Inquirer Football Writer

After patient years of rebuilding, after much trial and much error, are the Eagles finally ready for the all-out effort needed to bring back the National Football League pennant to the Quaker City? Just about every sign indicates that they are.

Most of the experts have installed the Green and White as the favorite to end Cleveland's long reign in the Eastern Conference as a result of compiling the best record in pre-season competition.

But this dazzling pre-season achievement in itself is not sufficient reason for unusual optimism. Since Jim Trimble has been head coach the Eagles have made a habit of doing well during the warm-up period. They won the "hinterland title" two years ago and yet finished a relatively poor second behind the Browns.

Last season they won their last five warm-up games, got off to a flying start in the regular campaign, but bogged down amid a crop of injuries in mid-season and were unable to rebound fast enough to keep the Browns from sneaking off with the diadem.

Why then should this season be any different? Doesn't a team that reaches top efficiency before the season usually have a disastrous slump during the regular campaign?

For one thing, the spirit among the Eagles is the highest it has been since the championship days of '49. They sense this is the big year toward which they've been striving and they're convinced they now have all the necessary weapons to reach the golden goal.

Thanks to such rookies as Dick Bielski, No. 1 draft choice from Maryland, and Ted Wegert, former Bainbridge star who never played college ball, and the transformation of defensive ace Jerry Norton into a ball carrier, the Birds now have a slashing ground attack to complement the devastating air arm directed by Adrian Burk and Bobby Thomason.

The overhead attack has been made more effective than ever by the use of Bobby Walston, leading NFL scorer as an end last year, at halfback in Trimble's new "three-end offense." It figures to take some of the pressure off veteran Pete Pihos and enable him to have his greatest season yet. The pre-season victory over the Chicago Bears here in the 18th Inquirer Classic was achieved through the air largely by means of the three-end strategy.

More speed and blocking strength has been added to the offensive line by Buck Lansford, rookie tackle from Texas; Bill Stribling, an experienced end who played previously with the New York Giants; Bob Kelley, first-year center from West Texas State, and the ageless Bucko Kilroy, who'll start his 13th season on offense rather than defense.

The defense, second best in the league last year, shapes up as strong as ever, if not stronger, with the switch of tackle Frank Wydo from the offensive unit, and the addition of tackle Jim Weatherall, former Oklahoma All-American, on the line and return from service of Bibbles Bawel and debut of Eddie Bell, Penn All-American, in the secondary.

The most vital difference, however, in the current squad is that it has considerably more depth than the teams of the past couple seasons. Almost every player can play two positions with equal effectiveness and this gives the team much desired versatility.

The Eagles had two or three players sidelined with injuries during the playing of the pre-season schedule—key veterans such as Jim Farmer, the club's leading ground gainer last year; Toy Ledbetter, Ralph Goldston and Tom Higgins, among others—yet the Birds kept rolling over foe after foe, a most accurate tip-off on the team's greater depth.

To be sure, injuries to key personnel unquestionably would hurt the Eagles' chances, but not nearly so much as they did last season.

It isn't likely that the Birds are so far advanced at this stage as to have a letdown later. Six new players are on the offensive unit and they are only starting to function smoothly together and should improve steadily as the season progresses.

Despite their enviable record, the Eagles' play was quite spotty in most of the tune-up games. But they gave this observer the impression of a club with tremendous latent power backed up with furious desire not unlike a giant airliner straining impatiently for the skies while the motors are being warmed up on the runway.

There's no telling how high the Birds might soar if they find their wings strong and true in this opening flight against the Giants.

This is the test that tells the story!

BIG-SCREEN COLOR TV IS HERE!

Mort Farr, leading TV and appliance dealer at 69th Street below Chestnut, announces immediate delivery and installation is now available on beautiful new 21-inch color television sets by RCA-Victor. Farr, a Brand Name Retailer-Of-The-Year winner and one of the first dealers to introduce black-and-white television in this area, is now one of the first to sell and service color TV.

These new full-size TV sets have far more viewing area than older small-screen color sets. Pictures are steady and brilliant; won't blur or fade. And these are compatible sets, receiving standard black-and-white telecasts sharp and clear as well as color.

Mort Farr maintains a complete service center with specialized equipment and an experienced factory-trained staff to assure expert installation and maintenance of color TV at all times.

Color television is expected to make rapid strides this fall with the advent of large-screen color and a widely-expanded scheduling of color programs, five times greater than last year. On September 17 the first color telecast of a college football game was carried on a national network; the game between Georgia Tech, and U. of Miami. A number of important sports events will be telecast in color with at least five college football games including the Army and Navy and Rose Bowl games, and the World Series. In addition, over 78 color shows are scheduled with three spectaculairs a month. It is estimated that 350,000 color sets will be purchased during 1956.

Just as was the case with black and white TV, the first big-screen color TV sets are being installed by Mort Farr in taverns and clubs; an added attraction for their customers that results in more sales, and more repeat business.
