GIANT LEADERS: Coach Jim Lee Howell with Captains Kyle Rote and Bill Svoboda.

The Best Offense . . .

TO DAY'S game with the Cardinals sends the Giants into the second half of their schedule. Coach Jim Lee Howell's world champions reached the midpoint of the race with a 4-2 won-lost record that puts them very much in the running for another National League title.

That they have done so well against the intensified opposition of what all experts agree is the "best league ever" and in the face of a series of harassing injuries to key personnel reflects high credit on the Giants as a team.

In a lot of ways, this has been a rough season on the Giants. They haven't had the use of Don Heinrich, normally their starting quarterback, for the last five games. Mel Triplett, whose blocking and plunging from fullback means so much to the attack, missed a couple of games.

Injuries and illness have taken a heavy toll of the offensive line, also. In every game, one or more forwards have been out of action. At various times, Tom Yelvington, Jack Stroud, Ken MacAfee and Jack Spinks have been drydocked.

Fortunately, Charlie Conerly has done a tremendous job of keeping the attack rolling. Bobby Epps provided stalwart relief service at fullback. Fellows like Stroud, before he was hurt, Bill Austin, Walt Yowarsky and Bob Schnelker pitched in to plug the gaps up front.

However, the offensive platooners would be the first to point out that their colleagues of the defensive unit deserve at least equal credit for keeping the Giants in the race.

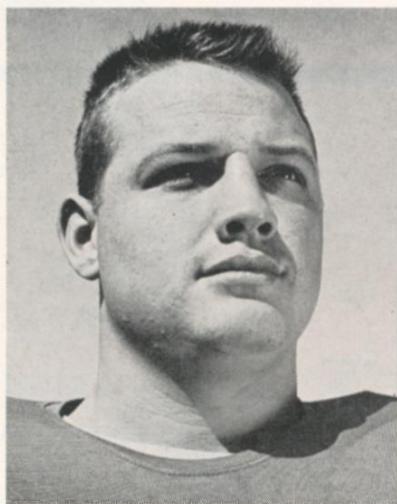

At Green Bay last Sunday, as you undoubtedly observed on your TV screen, the Giant defensive platooners had another big day.

Yes, they did get caught in the switches a couple of times on Packer long-gainers. But Bill Svoboda and his wrecking crew provided the two touchdowns that constituted the 31-17 Giant margin of victory and saved the day with a classic goal line stand.

Awarded the ball on the Giant 1-yard line on a pass-interference penalty in the end zone, the Packers could not gain an inch in four thrusts at the Giant line. If they had been able to put it across the score would have been tied. It was truly one of the memorable moments of the season.

To make it even a redder-letter day, two members of the defensive unit wrote their names into the scoring summary. Sam Huff pounced on a Packer punt blocked by Cliff Livingston for a touchdown and Em Tunnell, reviving a happy old custom, picked off a Packer pass and returned it 52 yards for the lock-up tally.

So, once again, hat's off to the defensive platoon!

GREATEST NAME IN GOOD GROOMING SINCE 1879

“Foot” Is the First Part of the Name of This Game

ONE of the things that has sold so many people on pro football is the marvelous proficiency of the game's specialists.

Pro passers hit receivers in the eye—and can specify which eye—up to 50 yards. Pro receivers catch anything they can get their hands on and most need to get only one hand on the ball to tuck it away.

However, the specialties that the pros have developed to the highest degree are the kicking arts.

The point-after-touchdown is made so automatically that some authorities, including Bert Bell, the National Football League commissioner, believe it might profitably be eliminated as a superfluity.

Field goals from any point inside midfield, some times even from beyond, are routine. It's a rare N.F.L. game that doesn't produce at least two or three 3-pointers.

The average N.F.L. kick-off carries to the goal line. Booming drives of 70 yards and more that carry clear out of the end zone occur so frequently as to provoke only a few “ohs and ahs.”

BEN AGAJANIAN

Punters, from 15 yards behind the scrimmage line in the standard spread formation now used, consistently hoist skyscraping spirals 40 yards or more into enemy ground. Boots angled inside the rival 20-yard line find the “coffin corner” with uncanny accuracy.

The N.F.L. kicking standard is so high that any deficiency is serious, almost fatal.

Fortunately, the Giants have no such problem. Their kicking specialists—Ben Agajanian and Don Chandler—rank with the best.

The 38-year-old Agajanian has been booting extra points and field goals for pay since 1944. His place-kicking efforts—Ben never has scored a touchdown—have established him as the third highest Giant scorer—in just six seasons with the club.

Perhaps the most accurate of all pro kickers up to 35 yards, Bootin' Ben also has good range. He holds the All-American Conference record of 53 yards and set a Giant mark of 50 yards against the Redskins this season.

The nation's top collegiate punter in 1955, Chandler joined the Giants last season and quickly demonstrated his specialist qualifications. One of the most graceful kickers the game has known, he sends his punts soaring amazingly high and far with the merest flick of his powerful right leg. Progressing fast as a place-kicker under Agajanian's tutelage, Don this season also has developed into a tremendous kick-off man.

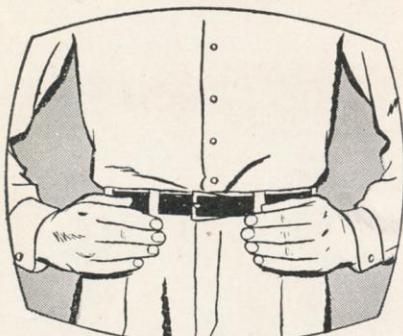

Coach Jim Lee Howell is happy to have a couple of booters like this in his kick.

Next Sunday, the Eagles!

BILL BARNES

The Giants, ambushed by the Redskins' rookie backs in their last Stadium appearance, will have to cope with another prize collection of precocious pros next Sunday.

The Philadelphia Eagles will bring to the Stadium a group of first-year backs that experts rate every bit as highly as the rampant young Redskins who impressed so highly here.

Coach Hughey Devore has been starting three rookies in his backfield. Sonny Jurgensen, of Duke fame, has wrested the quarterback post from Bobby Thomason, one of football's fine old pros, and Al Dorow, another experienced hand.

Bill Barnes, the "sleeper" All-America from Wake Forest who gave the Giants fits in the Chicago All-Star game, is their starting left halfback. At fullback, they have installed the fleet and powerful Clarence (Hi) Peaks, from Michigan State.

Supporting Barnes, performing kick-return chores and other odd jobs is another of 1956's great college players, Tommy McDonald, the sparkplug of Oklahoma's unbeaten national champions.

CLARENCE PEAKS

Other newcomers who have made the grade are Jimmy Harris, another flashy Oklahoma back, now playing defense; John Simeron, 254-pound offensive center from Purdue, and Tom Saidock, 260-pound defensive tackle from Michigan State.

These talented new players, plus 1956 and 1955 additions to the old hard core that still includes Chuck Bednarik, Tom Scott, Norm Willey, Frank Wydo and Bobby Walton stamps the Eagles as a rising force in the Eastern Division.

BOY FROM BIPPUS . . . Chris Schenkel

ALUST for travel has stirred Sportscaster Chris Schenkel most of his life. This is not surprising when you consider that home, to Chris Schenkel, is Bippus, Ind., a teeming metropolis of 300 which lies almost hidden amid the tall corn some 30 miles southeast of Fort Wayne.

Four older brothers and sisters already had done all there was to do in Bippus. Chris' father, Philip, furthermore, was the Rockefeller of the place.

At 12, Chris decided he would have to move on. With six-year-old brother Phil, he worked up a musical act—Chris playing guitar and Phil the mandolin—and the two baby-faced minstrels commenced to tour the Midwest.

By the time he was 15, Chris had taken up oratory and he soon decided that this new dodge was more reliable than twanging a guitar. His imagination was stirred by Ted Husing. "I remember thinking that sportscasting must be a great way to make a living," he recalls.

A Bippus basketball tourney

was sold out. Chris induced a representative of the telephone company to rig amplifiers to the bank, barber shop and drug store phones with Chris "broadcasting" play by play from the gym. This was his first "network" show.

Meanwhile, young Chris had won a number of oratorical contests, one of which provided a scholarship to Purdue. He majored in speech and got practical experience on the University station—"everything from Big Ten games on down."

In 1943 he entered the Army. Since he had learned German from his parents, he was sent to the University of Pittsburgh to master a third language, the purpose being to fit him for intelligence work in Europe.

At Pitt, signals got crossed and he was made to attend classes in—you guessed it—German. And, after two semesters of intelligence courses, he was sent to the Philippines as an infantry officer. He was in combat four months. Asked did he shoot anyone, he replies: "I don't know. I imagine so."

After discharge, he got work in Pawtucket, R. I., and broadcast Harvard and Boston College football games and local horse racing. But his eyes were on New York all the time. In 1956 he won an audition over 60 others as color announcer for the giants.

The fee would be $100 a game for 12 games. Chris deliberated

Mel Triplett

Mel Triplett (33), a No. 5 draft choice in 1955, has capably filled a long-standing Giant need for a fullback who can block and hit the line authoritatively. When big Mel rams his shoulders into a rival end or linebacker, he leaves a permanent impression. As a ballcarrier, he has first-down power plus breakaway speed. The 25-year-old Toledo graduate is the father of five children.

Bobby Epps (35), back in action after a year of service as an Army lieutenant, supplies the Giants with a welcome complementary punch at fullback. The stubby Pittsburgh graduate, very fast on the getaway, is an explosive runner on quick-openers and "draw" plays and, while he may not bruise his blocking targets as much as Triplett does, seldom misses the mark. A No. 14 draft choice in 1954, Bobby is married and has one son.

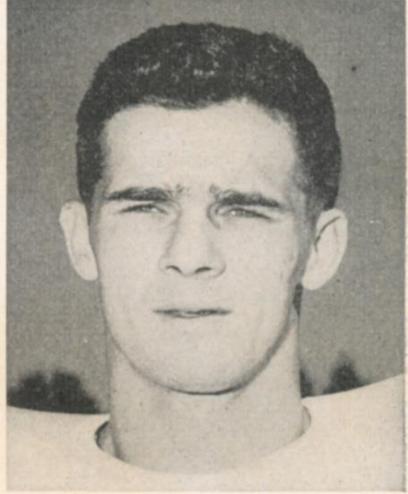

Bobby Epps

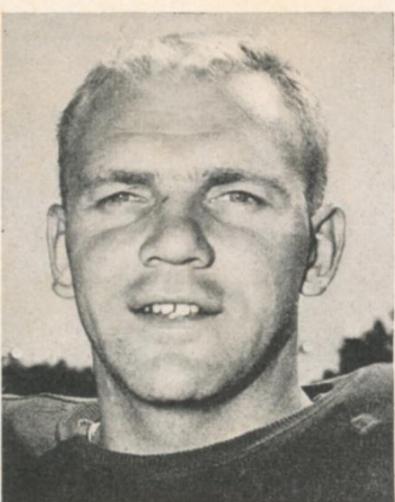

Jim Patton

Jim Patton (20), one of the many Ole Miss stars who have made the grade with the Giants, took over as regular right safety last season after a year of apprenticeship. Perhaps the fastest Giant, he's a far-ranging pass-defender and a crisp, decisive tackler. His speed makes him a breakaway threat on kick returns and interceptions. He raced 50 yards to a TD on an interception against the Steelers. Drafted No. 8 in 1955, Jim is married, has two youngsters.

Dick Nolan (25), one of the neighbors' boys from White Plains, has been Giants' regular right-side cornerman on defense for three of his four seasons with the New Yorkers. He's a fiery competitor who specializes in coming up fast to make booming tackles. A college star at Maryland, Dick was a No. 4 draft choice in 1954. He is married, has two children.

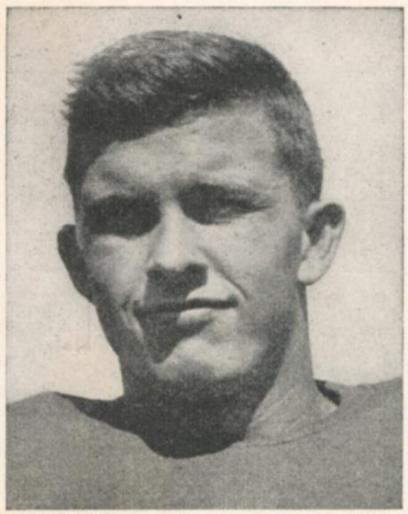

Dick Nolan

Bill Austin

Bill Austin (60), a member of the Giant family since 1950, has made a great comeback from a hobbling 1956 knee injury. The husky blond from Oregon State first cracked the Giant regular line-up as a 20-year-old in 1950. With time out for two years in the Army, he has been a key offensive player ever since. Excels at pulling out to lead interference on wide plays. A No. 13 draft choice in 1949, Bill is an off-season resident of Los Angeles. He's a benedict.

Ray Beck (61), a 1951 All-America at Georgia Tech who was drafted No. 2 in 1952, is perhaps the most versatile Giant lineman. As a rookie, he was an outstanding offensive guard. In 1955, after two years of Army service, he excelled as a defensive middle guard and linebacker. Last year, he played four different positions on the offensive line. Ray and his wife, Claire, who have two youngsters, are talented entertainers who have enlivened many a Giant party with their singing and dancing act.

OLLIE MATSON

EVER since the "Dream Backfield" era of Paul Christman, Charley Trippi, Elmer Angsman and Pat Harder, the Cardinals have featured an explosive attack.

This flock of Birds is carrying on that tradition. There is no more feared runner in football than big Ollie Matson. The 1952 Olympic sprinter from San Francisco, working his way up among the league's all-time ground-gainers, is a breakaway threat every time he handles the ball. Dave Mann, Matson's companion halfback, is another mercurial runner and pass-catcher.

To supplement this outside menace, the Cardinals have "keep you honest" inside punch. Devil-may-care Johnny Olszewski and Joe Childress, who understudies him at fullback, are high-voltage line-crashers. Then there is the brilliant Lamar McHan, a quarterback who ranks among the league's top passers and also likes to tuck that ball under his arm and carry it himself.

Gern Nagler, whose 83-yard dash with a McHan toss against the Redskins a few weeks back is the league's longest 1957 scoring pass, and Max Boydston, of Oklahoma fame, are fleet, nifty receivers.

A seasoned, hard-blocking line, featuring Jack Jennings and Len Teeuws, completes the formidable Cardinal offensive unit.

A swift, far-ranging secondary distinguishes Coach Ray Richards' defensive platoon. Dick (Night Train) Lane has been an all-league corner man the last couple of seasons and Lindon Crow, at right safety, led the pro circuit in interceptions in 1956.

Among the more interesting Cardinal rookies are Earl Putnam, offensive center from Arizona State whose 308 pounds establish him as the bulkiest player in the league; Jerry Tubbs, Oklahoma's All-America center of 1956, and Paul Larson, who led the nation in total offense at California a few years back.

only briefly, then resigned from all his New England assignments. Though he had nothing else lined up in New York, luck was with him. Ted Husing became ill and Chris took over Husing's Monday night fights. The next year Harry Wismer lost his voice while telecasting a Giant game from Pittsburgh. Chris did so well as a fill-in that he was hired for the TV job the following year. He has held it ever since.

By now, he has done virtually every major sporting event—racing's "Triple Crown" classics, the Masters Golf Tournament, Madison Square Garden basketball tournaments, the Milwaukee Braves road games.

He is married to the former Fran Paige and has a 2-year-old daughter, Christina. He has not had a vacation since he came to New York in 1952. "I remember that I got this job substituting for others," Chris says with a grin. "I don't want anyone substituting for me."

Jottings on the Giants

Except when he's bamboozling the opposition with his deft fakes, there's no sham or pretense about Charlie Conerly. On his own initiative the other day, Charlie corrected an error of long standing on the Giant official roster. "I'm 36 years old, not 33," said the Giant quarterback. "What's more, I'm not ashamed of it and hope to keep playing until I'm at least 40."

You probably are aware of it by now, but for the benefit of late-comers, the Giant office has been moved to the Coliseum Tower, 10 Columbus Circle. The IND, IRT (West Side local) and BMT subways—59th Street-Columbus Circle stops—will drop you practically on the doorstep.

Bootin' Ben Agajanian is handing out cigars in celebration of the birth of a daughter, his fourth youngster . . . Apologies to Bob Schnelker for having called him "Otto" in the Redskin program. Must have been thinking of Otto Schnellbacker . . . The Giants and visiting teams doff their hats to the Yankee grounds crew and Jim Thompson, the Stadium superintendent, for the great job they have done on the Stadium gridiron. "We have the best turf in the whole league," says Coach Jim Lee Howell.

Another commercial, in the public interest: Don't try to buy Giant tickets on Saturdays at 10 Columbus Circle. That office is closed Saturdays. Go to one of the other outlets: Yankee Stadium, the Yankee ticket office in Grand Central, the Davega Stores in Newark, Hackensack, Jamaica, Hempstead and White Plains or Andy Robustelli's Sports Shops in Stamford and Cos Cob.

Cliff Livingston of the Giants had won $6,000 on "Name That Tune" going into this week's show . . . The current issue of Ebony Magazine has an elaborate feature on the Giants' Em Tunnell . . . Beating the college bushes for future Giant talent are Al De Ruggatis, the former tackle, and Allie Sherman, the ex-backfield coach who just recently joined the scouting staff. De-Ro, now an old hand at bird-dogging, spotted Alex Webster and Sam Huff, among others.

Giant Blackboard

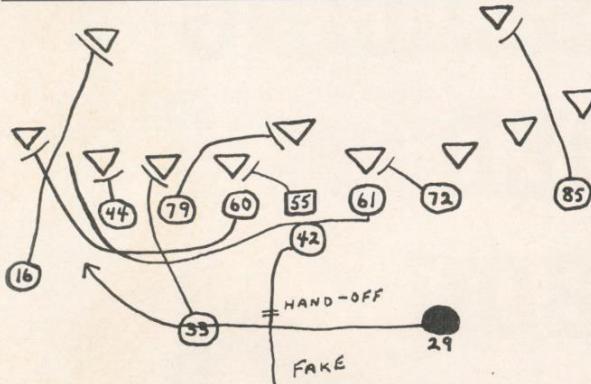

TODAY, we'll rapidly review another of the Giants' favored attacking sequences.

Vin Lombardi, head coach Jim Lee Howell's professor of offensive nomenclature, calls the formation from which the diagrammed off-tackle play evolves "balanced left over."

Equally often, the Giants use a "balanced right over" formation, with Webster (29), instead of Gifford (16), in the flanking position.

On the "balanced left over" play illustrated, Conerly (42) whirls out to his left on taking the handback from center. He fakes to the fullback—Triplett (33) or Bobby Epps (35)—who drives into the line, then hands off to the right half—Webster (29).

Led by two guards, Austin (60) and Beck (61), Webster slants to his left. Depending on the blocking angles Austin and Rote (44) are able to get on the defensive corner man and outside linebacker, Alex goes wide or cuts inside.

The Giant fullback blocks the defensive right end, releasing the left tackle—Brown (79)—for an angle shot at the middle line-backer. Webster and Gifford, running to the right, have made a lot of yardage on this powerful play the last three seasons.

Since an effective football attack consists of play sequences off the same formation, rather than just a series of unrelated plays, the Giants exploit all possibilities of their "balanced over" formation.

Could be that the fullback will get the ball on his dive into the line or for a sweep to the right, with the halfback faking a dive. Could be that either the fullback or the halfback who stays in gets a quick pitch for a fast sweep, with the end and flanker on that side cross-blocking the defensive corner-man and outside line-backer.

Could also be that the quarterback will pass off a double fake, drop back directly to pass or make a "draw" hand-off to either deep back on a feigned retreat to pass.

How many of these things the Giants actually will do in one game from "balanced over" depends on the course of the contest, the defense and what's working. The use of this versatile formation emphasizes the progressive aspect of Giant football.
